

Gastroenterology

What Is Gastroenterology?

Gastroenterology is a medical specialty focused on the digestive system—including the mouth esophagus, stomach, small intestine, large intestine (colon), rectum and anus.

Conditions Gastroenterology Treats

Children who have disabilities and complex conditions, including muscular dystrophy, spina bifida, juvenile arthritis and cerebral palsy can also have gastrointestinal (GI) challenges related to their primary conditions, including:

- Gastroesophageal reflux disease (GERD).
- Inflammatory bowel disease (IBD).
- Issues with oral motor function.
- Poor intestinal motility (movement).

Gastroenterology Tests and Treatments

Sometimes gastroenterology treatment involves improving a child's nutritional status and ability to eat. In other cases, testing is needed to assess the health and function of a child's gastrointestinal system.

Common gastroenterology tests include:

- Colon scan (also known as a barium enema).
- Swallowing study.
- Upper GI endoscopy.

When issues arise, our gastroenterologists work closely with the other members of your child's care team to develop a comprehensive treatment plan.
